Excerpt: .or by messengers, stirred up a large number of witnesses to testify against Jesus. They must certainly have spoken to many before they succeeded in finding so considerable a number of witnesses. The judges themselves alarming the citizens at midnight, they could not expect secrecy. It rather appears that Mark did not think of any secrecy. He must have felt the weight of the question, If the trial was strictly secret among those conspirators, how could Mark or any body besides the conspirators know what was done and what was spoken? He reports not only alleged facts but also the very words spoken on that occasion. Therefore it was necessary to bring in some honest outsiders, in the capacity of witnesses, to render plausible the origin of the report; and bringing in honest outsiders, the idea of secrecy is dispelled. As unlikely as it appears that a body of conspirators should alarm the community at midnight, going about in search of witnesses, still in the case of Mark it proves that he had no idea of a sham trial. In his ignorance of Jewish law, he imagined the trial which he described was lawful among Jews. He proves this, in the first place, by the very statement that witnesses were sought and produced. A court convoked and acting in rebellion to law and custom can be considered only a band of rebels. What use have such men of witnesses? Being lawless from the...
