Excerpt: .When arrived at the perfect state, they fly abroad during the evening or night in immense numbers; they lose their wings before morning and fall to the ground. It is probable the act of coupling takes place in the air. The larvae then collect the females and enclose them in a cell. The abdomen of the female acquires an enormous size. I have now given a short account of the Dragon-fly, the May-fly, the Ant-lion, the Caddis-fly, and the White-ant. The order Neuroptera includes many other insects extremely interesting and well known. I shall add the names of some of them to this paper, and leave the reader, after the example of the small chart I have given on p. 194, to make one upon a larger scale, and, having studied these insects, to place them in it. We are just entering upon the season most favourable to entomological researches, and were an inducement to the study wanting, we should, I think, find it in these words of Kirby and Spence: -- Insects appear to have been Nature s favourite production, in which, to manifest her power and skill, she has combined all that is beautiful and graceful, interesting and alluring, or curious and singular, in every other class of her children. To her valued miniatures she has given the most delicate touch and highest finish of her pencil. Numbers she has armed with glittering mail, which reflects a lustre like burnished metals. In others, she...
