It has been thought that if precise instruments of this class were made, they would prove of much scientific value in showing the character of the more minute barometric fluctuations. At meteorological stations, seaports, collieries, and many other important situations, they would render considerable aid to the unpractised eye in detecting frequently and easily the changes which are continually taking place in atmospheric pressure. Water being the most convenient fluid for a long range barometric column, many water barometers have been constructed, notably that made by Professor Daniell for the Royal Society in 1830. An interesting account of this instrument appears in the Philosophical Transactions for 1832. About the Publisher Forgotten...
